The CT Department of Consumer Protection, Trade Practices Division, requires that all contractors who remove, replace, or subcontract for the removal or replacement of a residential underground storage tank system must have a home improvement contractor's registration. A plumbing or heating contractor's license is also acceptable.

For all types of underground or aboveground storage tank removals, a plumbing or heating contractor's license is required for severing and removing fill, vent, and fuel lines.

A building or trade permit is not required for the removal of an UST but a permit is required for the installation of all tanks: above, underground, and those located inside a structure. The Town of Bloomfield has passed an ordinance further regulating the installation and removal of residential USTs.
